Thesis Introduction Writing:

Here is where we will assist you as you outline your full study, providing some context for the issue and describing the problem you’ve identified, the specific purpose of your study, the research questions you propose to answer through your data collection, and the overall study design.

We can ensure that your introduction includes citations of both recent and seminal studies in your discipline that justify your specific approach in your research.

Literature Review:

Often the most time-consuming element of thesis writing is developing a thorough literature review—and if your university requires a 2-3 chapter literature review including 100-200 sources (as is often the case for our thesis writing clients in the UK and other Commonwealth countries), this is especially the case! That being said, the literature review is critical to the success of your thesis, as this section will reinforce the existence of a current gap in research that your study will address. This section will also outline the theoretical or conceptual framework for your approach, and if you are a novice researchers, we can absolutely draw on our expertise across a wide range of disciplines to help you identify the best theory or theories to guide your inquiry.

Methodology: Research, Structure, and Detailed Explanation of Methods

We can help you provide a detailed explanation of your research design, including why the selection of a your specific quantitative or qualitative research approach is best to investigate your particular research limitations (such as your assumptions as a researcher, and the validity and reliability of your data), in fact.

Thesis Data Analysis and Results:

Since many thesis projects include primary and/or secondary data analysis, we’ve become familiar with a wide variety of government databases, school-based data, standardized test data, medical data, financial reports, in addition to virtually every type of qualitative data such as interviews, focus groups, primary historical documents, and speeches, among many others. Regardless of your specific dataset or data collection instrument, we can import and clean (if necessary) your data, prior to completing whatever qualitative or statistical analysis you might require. We’re experts in quite sophisticated statistical analysis (including path analysis and SEM), as well as in-depth qualitative analysis protocols often required for exploratory or larger-scale research projects, so we’re well-equipped to assist with virtually any data analysis and results discussion. As part of our comprehensive assistance to draft your results, we can incorporate tables and figures, as appropriate, to provide clear visual illustrations of each of your key findings. At the end of this process, we would be able to provide you with all the files generated by the coding, as SPSS, NVivo, and/or pdf files, as appropriate.

Discussion and Conclusion:

Based on the findings outlined in the results section, we can help you draft a full discussion and conclusions section, providing critical analysis of your findings to highlight their significance for implementation and future research on your topic, both for the population and/or region represented by your dataset or participants, and with discussion of how the findings intersect with more general research in the field. Essentially, your results will guide the organization of this section’s discussion of the broader landscape of your research. By incorporating significant discussion of current scholarship in the field, this section will, in the process, confirm the importance of your results. Finally, this section would describe any limitations that emerged from your research and make recommendations for continued research, before summarizing the thesis in full.

Final Thesis Editing (MLA, APA, Chicago, Harvard, and more):

Once your thesis is completed, we can help conduct a thorough edit of the work following any major editing standard including APA, MLA, Chicago, Harvard, and Turabian. We would ensure that your document is ready to submit based on a comprehensive review for grammar, sentence structure, overall formatting (both for your selected editing standard and your university’s requirements), references, citations, preliminaries, and appendices.

Thesis

Initial Work

- Frequent use of broad overstatements created an impression of bias
- Large sections of the literature review lacked supporting citations
- Initial draft contained many single-sentence paragraphs

- Several researchers were cited without clear discussion of their findings
- Control framework was vaguely explained

- Acronyms such as SWOT were not explained clearly
- Different types of corporate strategies were not discussed
- Discussion of literature was initially a single, long section

Plan to Fix

- Eliminate overstatements and instead present specific findings from literature
- Add citations for all assertions, further supporting objectivity of the review
- Synthesize findings of different studies into full-length paragraphs

- Expand the literature review substantially to meet requirements
- Clarify discussion of strategic planning by including specific findings
- Elaborate explanation of control framework and added figure to illustrate
- Define full terms for any acronyms used to increase clarity for the reader
- Diversify discussion of corporate strategies to compare and contrast these
- Organize review by subthemes in the ferroalloys literature
